Historical Notes

HORNBY CASTLE was in mediæval times a stronghold of the St. Quintin family, by whose name the oldest part of the structure, "St. Quintin's Tower," is still known. Through the marriage of a St. Quintin heiress it passed to a Conyers, of Durham, and the various branches of the family became firmly established in these parts. Either Sir John Conyers, of Hornby, or his brother, Sir William, of Marske, is now usually identified with the mysterious "Robin of Redesdale," under whose leadership the North rose in rebellion against Edward IV.'s proposed love-match with Elizabeth Wydvile.

In after years Sir John was a favourite knight of the body to Henry VII., and his grandson and successor, William, who is said to have fought at Flodden, became constable of Richmond and Middleham Castles, and was summoned to Parliament as Lord Conyers. During the progress north in 1503 of the Lady Margaret Tudor, for her marriage with James IV. of Scotland, Sir William rode out from Hornby with fifty horsemen to escort her through his bailiwick. According to Leland, who viewed "the chiefest house of the Lord Coniers, a iij miles from Snale and a ij miles south from Keterick," not many years later, this owner "did great cost on Hornby Castle, which before his day was but a mean thing." In other words, he transformed what had been a mere feudal fortress into a country seat having all the amenities known to Tudor times. The outer walls, and the inner court with its richly carved doorways and stone heraldry, are much as he left them, except for the Georgian windows. Above the principal entrance are the arms of the house of Conyers—their device, a hanging sleeve, quartered with those of the families into which they married, with their motto below, "Un Dieu : Un Roy."

The direct Conyers male line at Hornby failed with Sir William's grandson, John third Lord Conyers, Governor of Berwick and Carlisle, and Warden of the Scottish March. His daughter, Elizabeth, carried the estate to the ancient Northern family of Darcy, and in 1640 the title was revived in favour of her son. Again in 1778 the estate was without male heir on the death of Robert eighth Lord Conyers and fourth Earl of Holderness, joint Secretary of State with the elder Pitt to George III., whom Horace Walpole dubbed in his superior way, "a formal piece of dullness." His only daughter, Amelia Darcy, married Francis Godolphin Osborne, Marquess of Carmarthen, and afterwards Duke of Leeds, in whose family Hornby remained until its recent sale.
